Historic Courtyard Restaurant

Since 1827, the building at 21 George Street has been a witness to history – and for much of its past, a home to hospitality. 1827 – First constructed as a log tavern that quenched the thirsts of the workingmen whose labour gave birth to Bytowne (Ottawa's original name), an eventual addition transformed the building into the modest McArthur House Hotel. 1837 – By 1837, much of the original building was gone, and like many of the wooden shanties of the early city, it had been replaced by a structure made of locally quarried limestone. It was known briefly as the Ottawa Hotel, and later as "McArthur's British Hotel". 1865 – Construction for a new wing began and the building would eventually be leased to the newly minted federal government to house a garrison of 150 men charged with the task of protecting Governor General Lord Monck. 1875 – From 1875 to 1880, the building was refurbished and operated as the "Clarendon House Hotel". Following this venture, 21 George served as headquarters for the Geological Survey of Canada, and later, a branch of the Mines department, until the middle of the Second World War. 1978 – After decades of sitting empty, the NCC began the renovations to transform 21 George into the Courtyard Restaurant. While the restaurant first opened in July 1980, just 5 weeks later a fire in an adjoining building caused the new restaurant to close for repairs. 2010 – The Courtyard Restaurant celebrated its 30th Anniversary.
