What Is GCcollab?

GCcollab is a digital collaboration platform focused on connecting students and academics from Canadian post-secondary institutions with federal public servants, information and people from across Canada.

GCcollab creates a shared space that brings public servants from a variety of federal departments and agencies to engage with Canadians and encourages open discussion and collaboration on topics that are important to you.

Our starter topics include:

- ❖ Awareness of Indigenous issues;
- ❖ Global issues;
- ❖ Environment and climate change;
- ❖ Government in the 21st century; and
- ❖ Recruitment

This new project operates out of the Government of Canada's Treasury Board Secretariat and is an important step towards a more innovative, open, and collaborative way to identify, explore and co-create policy and research agendas and an example of the Public Service of the future – innovative, forward thinking and engaged with citizens.

Who Is Involved?

As GCcollab expands, our team is working with a growing number of universities and colleges from coast to coast to coast.

Canada's post-secondary institutions recognize the potential GCcollab has for collaboration with the public service, and what that means for research opportunities.

Our student ambassador network continues to grow each day, and aims to promote GCcollab on university and college campuses across the country.

Why Should I Join?

Students

GCcollab is an opportunity for me to connect with public servants and participate in the policy-making process. I can share my research, network with public servants and other students, and learn about employment opportunities with the federal Public Service.

Academics

We can leverage GCcollab to support class discussions, and use live policies and programs for in-class analyses. GCcollab can help us support our grant-based research by connecting us with other researchers within our fields, and expand professional networks.

Public Servants

Public servants have an opportunity to collaborate with fresh, creative, and strategic thinkers, who are available to share their research and help us further create evidence-based policy. Connecting with academics and students from across Canada lets us see what the future of the Public Service has to offer.
